

Other People's Children

Minors are simply independent beings with their own volition and ethical bearings. In this respect, we might regard other people's children as simply adults who, apart from their relatively diminutive size, are capable of the same good and evil as the rest of us.

